HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

In Anno Domini, 1911, when luxurious palace cars have made travel easy and pleasurable, when the majority of people betake themselves wherever they list by purchasing a ticket for wheeling a political trend out of a pass and occupying a Pullman section with plush seats, and African porters to minister to their innumerable wants, it sounds like fiction to recall the times when Phoenix could only be entered by stage. W. G. Giff, a capitalist of Peoria, Illinois, who registered at the Ford yesterday came to Phoenix in 1888, by way of Maricopa, the nearest railroad point at the time, and declared the present mode of ingress vastly superior and a great deal more comfortable than the old stage and flatboat line, which was formerly maintained between Phoenix and Maricopa. At that time it was necessary to leave Maricopa by stage, cross the Gila river, which was often swollen and dangerous, take another stage to the Salt River, ferry across, and take stage again in order to reach the sunny little town which was then the capital of the Salt River valley, only, but has since become the capital of the territory, and a genuine city. Three stage rides behind wild bronchos, and two swollen streams to cross, a series of discomforts and privations too strenuous even for the modern style of traveler—intervened between Phoenix and the nearest railroad point, and there is no doubt that the city hotel registers would show fewer signatures if the old stage and boat line offered the only facility for entrance into the capital. When asked to describe the impression Phoenix made upon him at this time, the date of his first venture into the Salt River valley, experience he adored ranch life and

Mr. Giff replied, "It looked like the Garden of Eden. After the extreme cold of the east the valley looked like paradise to me." He said that things were looking more favorable and more beautiful now than they did then, so the Phoenix of today must equal paradise plus. Mr. Giff has come to stay for an indefinite period.

Mr. Louis A. Wright of the Main Copper company of Globe, registered from Los Angeles last evening at the Adams Annex. Mr. Wright is one of the most prominent mining men in the territory, and says he will stay three or four days before returning to Globe.

E. K. Foltz, of Pierce, formerly in the employ of the Commonwealth Mining & Milling company of that place, arrived in Phoenix yesterday and put up at the Adams Annex, with the intention of staying in Phoenix until he can think of some better place to go which will probably be never. Mr. Foltz thinks things are rather quiet in Pierce at the present, but will no doubt pick up again ere long. There is no question about it, Pierce is in Arizona, and Arizona is going to be one of the best states in the union after the constitution—but this is not a political column. However, the darkest of pessimists admit the fact that the mining interests have a bright future before them, and if Mr. Foltz has contracted a taste for mining work he can start in again at his favorite occupation before many months have gone by. The trip down was uneventful and the train came in on time, a rare thing in these other places where the weather man hits it every time by prognosticating "blizzards and colder."

S. R. H. Norstrom, (a name euphonious, impressive and almost as long as the party who owns it) came to Phoenix about three months ago and stopped at the Ford for a time, leaving there for the McConaughy ranch a few weeks ago expecting to find, in the contemplation of pastoral life, a placid and restful charm that would solace him for his absence from his loved country, Sweden. But this was not to be. In the first place his visits to Phoenix were so protracted, and his visits to the ranch so abbreviated, that he never learned to really love the country for its own sake, since very little can be seen of a ranch between the hours of 12 midnight, the time scheduled for his arrival from town and 6 in the morning, the hour of his departure. It will be observed by the perceptive reader that this program obliterated the necessity of doing actual labor other than hitching and un hitching his horse, which would indicate Mr. Norstrom's firm belief in the conservation of energy. But one day the horse bolted. Mr. Norstrom said "wow" in an authoritative voice, which would have stopped any ordinary animal but this one. He then pulled on the reins, firmly but persuasively, and finally with insistence and vigor, but still the horse persisted in running off. A smush-up resulted in which Mr. Norstrom sustained a severe shock due to the impact of the horse's left hind hoof, which was suddenly projected backward, against his left leg. After this experience he adored ranch life and left last evening for Globe, where he will take up surveying.

W. S. Shain, of Oakland, California, the territorial agent for the Pacific Manufacturing Book company, and the McKaskey Account Register company, registered at the Commercial hotel last night, and says that he will remove his headquarters from Prescott to Phoenix. There is a better prospect of doing a big business here and the move will no doubt be a profitable one.
